OR the first time the real cause of Clarke batted. This d.d not suit Clarke's fancy. He had been getting away with the trick right along and Bowerman's the trick right along and Bowerman's work was about to stop him. In a game between Louisville and Pittsburg Ciarke bunted as usual and the, turned around and threw his bat at Bowerman so as it to step him. The bat struck Bowerman in the throat and he was almost knocked gut. Enraged at the Carke tactics, Bowerman grabbed the bat and started after Ciarke. He caught him at first base and let him have it with the bat. A riot was barely averted by the police. The next day Bowerman saw Clarke under the grand-stand and gave him a punch in the jaw.

The next year Louisville and Pittsburg were consolidated, and on account of the cumity Bowerman could not remain with the Pittsburg club with Clarke manager and he went to kew York. All the recent troubles, it is said, spring from that old feud resulting from the bat throwing.
